WHEAT DAMAGED

BLOWN DOWN BY WIND IN TUESDAY NIGHT'S STORM.

HEAVIEST RAIN IN YEARS

While Damaging Small Grains It Was Helpful to Corn, Which Promises Mammoth Crop.

Tuesday night's rain was the heaviest of this month, and reports from the surrounding country say that the small grain was badly damaged in places. The precipitation last night amounted to 1.6 inches, making the total for the month 2.67 inches. This is the heaviest June rainfull in three years, there being 2.11 inches in 1912 and 1.06 inches in 1911. It was also the heaviest rain in one time since 1909, when it rained 1.97 inches one day during June of that year. An electrical storm accompanied the rain and the wind.

The reports of damage to the grain say that wheat suffered the worst. The oats, the farmers think, will straighten up again and be all right. In those sections where the rain and wind were heaviest, the small grain looks as if a log had been rolled over it.

Many farmers who were in the city today reported that the wheat crop in their vicinity will be all right. While it is damaged in a number of places, still the damage is not all over the county. The farmers are about ready to cut their wheat.

Ernest Wray of the Myrtle Tree neighborhood is of the opinion that they had a three inch rain in that community. His wheat and oat crops were badly damaged, but he things the oats will raise again and make a good crop. His wheat crop is not all together ruined, as it will make a good crop, but not as good as it was before the rain.

The rain will give the corn a new start and will also help out the pastures. It was certainly fine for the corn and prospects are fine for a big crop this year.

Prof. J. E. Cameron of the Normal agricultural department said that the wheat on the Normal ground is nearly all down. The damage, he thinks, cannot be estimated until the wheat rises. Prof Cameron said:

"The falling of the wheat is due to the weakness of the straw. This weakness of the straw is caused by the wet spring and the rich soil. One noticeable thing was that a variety of wheat sent up by the state university experiment station was undamaged. This was the 'improved poole.'"

MARRIED MEN ALMOST WON.

But Sawyers' Unassisted Double Play Was a Feature That Should Have Been Credited to Bachelors.

The married men all but defeated the single men in their ball game at the Presbyterian picnic Tuesday afternoon. The final score was 11 to 10 in favor of the boys.

Of course the married men had to run in some ringers, Will Sawyers for one, but the other team did not protest, for Will really should have married years ago. And as a benedict Mr. Sawyers would undoubtedly have chirked up and made one of the greatest ball players America has ever seen. Why, the mere fact that he came so close to married life yesterday as to be put on the married men's team so elated him that he could not keep from making a double play unassisted.

Will was holding down the second sack, and, like a veteran, was making a base runner hug the half way place. No chance to get away from Will and steal third. Suddenly there was a sharp crack as the batter's stick met the ball and shoved it out toward Will. Will declares that ball gained speed every moment, and to shield himself he stuck his gloved hand in front of him. The ball landed in the glove and refused to fall out of it. With great presence of mind Will planted his foot on the base, and the runner racing toward third had to go on in to the bench.

There were many other features to the game, but none which approached this wonderful double. Each team scored one run in the first. In the third the married men took a lead of two runs. They continued scoring and kept in the lead until the last of the ninth, when the boys succeeded in pushing the winning run across the plate.

Score by innings:

Married men....1 0 2 1 3 2 0 0 1—10
Single men.....1 0 0 0 1 0 4 0 5—11

Players:

LEASED MOSS BUILDING.

Mrs. S. F. McCrary Will Occupy Handsome Quarters With Her Millinery Stock.

Dr. H. E. Moss of Kansas City spent Tuesday in Maryville attending to business regarding his store building, on South Main street, that has been under course of improvement for several weeks.

Dr. Moss has so changed the building with modern improvements that it looks like a brand new store. The front is of yellow brick, with plate glass front that is admirably arranged for displaying goods. The hard wood floors and wood work are finished handsomely. The walls and steel ceiling are finished in light yellow, making it one of the most attractive store interiors in town.

The second story is nicely arranged as a flat and two office rooms.

ROADS TO GIVE IN

WILL ACCEPT DECISION OF SUPREME COURT AT ONCE.

2-CENT FARE JULY 1

Wabash and Burlington Included in Roads Reaching Agreement at Conference at Kansas City.

The 2-cent fare on railroads will soon be a reality again in Missouri. Attorneys for the railroads operating in the state met in Kansas City yesterday and decided that it would be useless to argue further against the ruling of the United States supreme court.

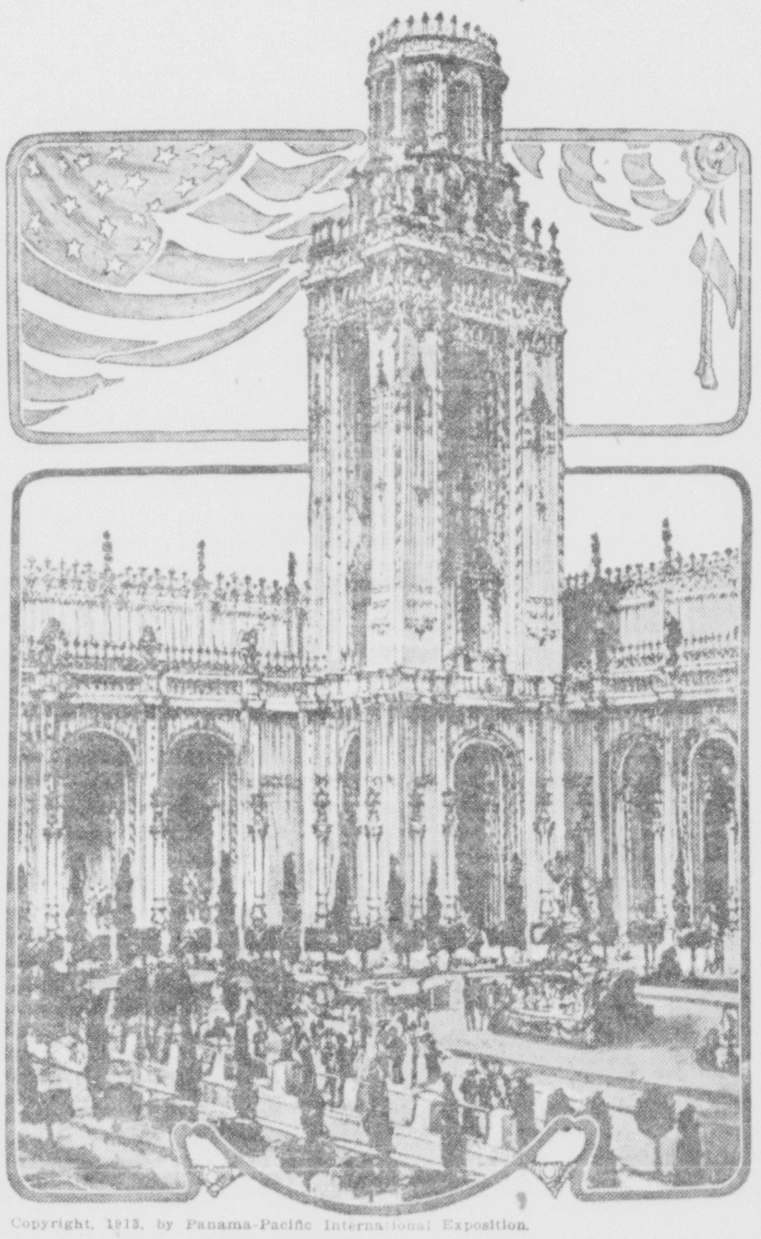
The lower rates will be put into effect as soon as arrangements can be made, which may be by the first of July. A meeting with the state public utilities commission will be held at Kansas City on July 1, when the date for the change will be definitely fixed.

Two cents a mile for passenger traffic was not specified in the decision of the court, which leaves the way open for a still lower rate if the commission decides the railroads can stand it. The 2-cent rate, however, is the one over which the fight has been made during the last seven years and for the present it is the only one which will be figured on. Five cents a mile for them would mean confiscation. All compete at some points with roads that are forced to make the lower rate, so the ruling will apply indirectly to them also.

The railroads affected by the decision are: Missouri Pacific; St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern; St. Louis, Southwestern; Wabash; Chicago & Alton; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe; Kansas City Southern; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Missouri, Kansas & Texas; St. Louis & San Francisco.

Those exempted under the ruling are: Chicago Great Western; Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City; St. Joseph & Grand Island; St. Louis & Hannibal; Kansas City, Clinton & Springfield.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, SAN FRANCISCO, 1915.



Copyright, 1913, by Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

An echo tower in the Festive or East Court. At night the East Court, with its pavements of gold, its great banks of flowers, and its lofty palms, will be flooded with light. Musical masterpieces of the world will be rendered by the chimes in the towers. Great saengerfests and choral festivals will assemble upon the floors of the court. In the Festive Court, the visitor will behold a vision surpassing the richest dreams of Oriental or Moorish architecture. The floors of this court will be in tesselated pavements of gold. In the center of the court will be great groups of sculpture with fauns, dancing nymphs and satyrs. There will be great fountains upon which magic lights will play at night and at night this mystic court, as all others, will be flooded by a glow of indirect light which will resemble a bright moonlight. At the south end of the court will be a huge tower 270 feet in height in which will be a great organ with echo organs in smaller towers of the court. The Festive Court will be a court of music, of acting, and symphonic dancing. Here will assemble many of the great pageants of Oriental nations that will take part during the exposition; here too will come many of the processions from the amusement center, which will be designed to draw visitors from the more serious phases of the exposition.

WAS 50 YEARS AGO

HALF A CENTURY SINCE DECIDING BATTLE WAS FOUGHT.

WHERE SHOT FELL THICK

A Vivid Description of the Terrific Cannonading That Preceded Battle, Where 50,000 Fell.

The fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg will be celebrated next week from July 1 to 3. The United States government is going to commemorate it very fitly by taking back to the field of battle the old soldiers, both Union and confederate, who fought there half a century ago.

This will mean much to these old veterans, many of whom are going back for the first time since '63. Going back aged, crippled, to renew old acquaintances and associations and to meet old enemies as friends.

But what does Gettysburg mean to those of us who have lived since the war days. We probably remember it from history as one of the greatest battles of the world. We know that there the cause of the confederacy was lost. Possibly we remember that the mortality was close to 50,000. We have heard with interest the stories of our grandfathers, the movements in which their companies took part. If we wish to get a vivid picture of the whole of the three days fighting, a picture which brings the war to us, we can do no better than to read "Gettysburg—A Heritage," by Edgar Allen Forbes in the July American Magazine. With unusual description Mr. Forbes brings out the events of each day, and the first day, neglected in histories, contained some of the bitterest fighting of the war.

Coming to the third day of the battle Mr. Forbes writes in part:

"The great hour of Gettysburg is at hand—the hour of the evening sacrifice. The cannoneers on Seminary Ridge are grouped behind a hundred massed guns, facing another hundred on Cemetery Ridge, a mile distant. Pickett, his long black hair falling about his shoulders, rides up to Lee and reports that his divison is ready. Longstreet also is there, moody and silent, but inwardly rebellious.

"An order from Alexander, chief of artilleys, sends the cannoneers to their posts behind the cruel engines of death. Two puffs of smoke and flame shoot out from the Washington artillery, and the work of hell begins with solid shot and shell on both sides. For two long hours the overture continues in a deafening roar—'the heaviest cannonading ever heard on the American continent.'

"The fire of neither side does any serious harm to the sheltered infantry, but the shells scatter death and destruction among the batteries, where the sound of exploding caissons alone drowns the pitiful neighing of wounded horses. At 'the Bloody Angle,' where Pickett's blow is to fall heaviest, here is what is happening:

"Lieutenant Cushing of Battery A, Fourth U. S. artillery, challenged the admiration of all who saw him. Three of his limbers were changed with the caisson limbers under fire. Several wheels were shot off his guns and replaced, till at last—severely wounded himself, his officers all killed or wounded, and with but cannoneers enough to man a section—he pushed his gun to the fence, and was killed while serving his last canister into the ranks of the approaching enemy."

A 3 PER CENT BID

MARYVILLE NATIONAL GETS THE COUNTY MONEY NEXT YEAR.

SEVERAL WANT BRIDGES

Graham, Elmo and Dawsonville Represented at an Adjourned Session of County Court.

The county court, in an adjourned session today, awarded the county money to the Maryville National bank, they being the highest bidder. The bid of that bank was 3 per cent. The other banks in Maryville had bids as follows: Real Estate bank, 2⅝ per cent; Nodaway Valley bank, 2½ per cent, and First National, 2⅞ per cent. During the past year the county money has been divided between the four banks in Maryville. The balance of county money on hand on March 31 was over $75,000, but this amount will be decreased, as $24,000 is to be paid out August 1 on the poorhouse bond issue.

The court had several delegations to appear before them relative to bridges. A delegation from Hughes township, composed of C. P. Schmidt, John Lorance, John Wilson, John Gex, F. C. Gex, Clarence Leeper, Ed Black and Fred Dyson, drove from Graham to the city in automobiles to urge the court to fix some bridges in that township. The Hughes township party also want to make requisition on the state for $1,466, as that amount of money has been donated by the people of that township in permanent road improvement work there.

Another delegation here was from Elmo and Dawsonville in regard to bridges. The party was composed of E. M. Bailey, E. A. Bailey, W. M. Johnston, W. A. Johnston, Harry Anderson, Henry Colter, T. R. Livingood, Grant Elrod, S. M. Davault of near Elmo; Dave Bain, Gene Humphreys, Will McAtee, James Spangler and Mr. Shelton of Dawsonville.

The court was in session late this afternoon going over the bids for new concrete bridges. They had made no selection at press time.

Just a-Wearyin' for You.

Just a-wearyin' for you,
All the time a-feelin' blue,
Wishin' for you, wonderin' when
You'll be comin' home again.
Restless, don't know what to do,
Just a-wearyin' for you.

Keep a-mopin' day by day;
Dull—in everybody's way;
Folks they smile and pass along,
Wonderin' what on earth is wrong;
'Twould help 'em if they knew—
Just a-wearyin' for you!

Room's so lonesome, with your chair
Empty by the fireplace there,
Just can't stand the sight o' it;
Go out doors and roam a bit;
But the woods is lonesome, too,
Just a-wearyin' for you.

Comes the wind with sound that's jes'
Like the rustlin' o' your dress;
An' the dew on flower an' tree
Twinkles like your steps to me;
Violets, like your eyes so blue—
Just a-wearyin' for you!

Mornin' comes, the birds awake—
Used to sing so for your sake;
But there's sadness in the notes
That comes trillin' from their throats;
Seem to feel your absence, too—
Just a-wearyin' for you!

Evenin' comes, I miss you more
When the dark glooms 'round the door;
Seems just like you orter be
There to open it for me,
Latch goes tinklin', thrills me through,
Sets me wearyin' for you.

Just a-wearyin' for you,
All the time a-feelin' blue,
Wishin' for you, wonderin' when
You'll be comin' home again,
Restless, don't know what to do,
Just a-wearyin' for you.

SCIENTISTS TELL OF THE SEA

Some Facts Not Generally Known, But of Interest to the Man Who Admires Nature.

Not only is the sea the reservoir into which all rivers run, but it is the cistern that finally catches all the rain that falls, not merely upon its own surface, but upon the surface of the land and upon the roofs of our houses. It has been calculated that each year a layer of the entire sea fourteen feet thick is taken up into the clouds. This vapor is fresh, and, if all the water could be removed in the same way, none of it being returned, there would, it is figured, be left a layer of pure salt 230 feet high on the bed of the Atlantic. These figures are based upon the assumption that three feet of water contain one inch of salt, and that the average depth of the ocean is three miles.

At a depth of about 3,500 feet the temperature is uniform, varying but little between the poles and the equator. The colder water is below. In many deep bays the water begins to freeze at the bottom before it does at the surface.

At that depth waves are not felt. The force of waves is in proportion to their height. It is said that the sea strikes upon certain rocks with the force of seventeen tons for each square yard.

The pressure of water increases with the depth. One mile down this pressure is reckoned at more than a ton to the square inch—in other words, more than 133 times the pressure of the atmosphere. The depth of the sea presents some interesting considerations. If it is claimed by one authority, the Atlantic ocean were lowered 6,564 feet, it would be reduced to half its present width. If it were lowered a little more than three miles the result would be dry land all the way between Newfoundland and Ireland. If the Mediterranean were lowered 660 feet, Africa would be joined to Italy, and three separate seas would remain.

PERIL OF FRENCH FASHIONS

Rev. Alpheus C. Karr Tells of an Incident at the Opera in Denver.

The immorality of French fashions was being discussed at a tea in Denver. The new idea of American fashions for American women was being praised. Rev. Alpheus then said:

"It is time that we removed our women from the peril of French fashions. I attended the opera last year during the Easter holidays. My companion pointed out to me a young matron, blazing with diamonds, and he said:

"'That is old Gobsa Golde's daughter, the countess. I knew her father when he went about with his pants held up by one suspender.'"

"I regarded the beautiful young woman through my glass. Her dress was audacious. I said, dryly:

"'She must take after her father, then. Her gown, I see, is held up by one strap.'"

For the Ideal School.

M. Augustin Rey, a Persian architect, has described his ideal school in a recent paper. He said that the beneficial effects of the violet rays were so well known that it was criminal to build in such a way that they could not penetrate to every part of a room; it was doubly important that this should be possible in schoolrooms. If there was a choice between heat, ventilation, and sunshine we should see that he had the sunshine first. His building was so arranged that the classes should meet in the east rooms in the afternoon, after the morning sun had thoroughly disinfected them, and in the west in the morning, since the afternoon sun would have disinfected the western rooms on the previous day. There should be plenty of ground and plenty of sand about school houses. It is better to economize in decorations than in sunlight and ventilation. He said that while this was his ideal school he preferred the open air school.

Hotel Butter and Coffee.

The butter served in hotels costs more per guest than the coffee. This is an easily proved statement, for with butter costing 50 cents or more a pound, and with 32 pats to the pound each pat of butter served costs the hotel at least a cent and a half for each pat.

Coffee generally averages 30 cups to the pound, and few hotels are paying today, with coffee at its highest price in 50 years, more than 30 cents and most of them not over 27 or 28 cents a pound, while some restaurants are serving coffee at still lower figures. With the good profit there is in coffee surely no restaurant, be it in a hotel or not, should be content to serve an inferior grade to its guests.—From the Steward.

He Took the Coat.

Chester Thomas, colored, was being tried before Judge Ambler on the charge of stealing an overcoat. He began:

"I was walking down Charp street when a man I never saw befo' comes up and says, 'Here, feller, is a good overcoat.' I takes the coat from him."

Judge Ambler interrupted, saying:

"Thomas, you do not think I am going to believe any such tale as that? If you had pleaded guilty and made an honest statement I might have been considerate."

Thomas shouted:

"If that's the case, Judge, I took the coat."

He was paroled.—Baltimore Dispatch to New York World.

All the members of the class were present: Vijune Colden, Ula Strader, Greta Kemp, Josephine Wilderman, Della Hook, Loma Bower, Dorothy DeMotte, Grace Dragoo, Alma Lucas, Ruby Irwin, Lizzie Smith, Mary Sewell, Verna Wright.

You Can Rely on Deering Twine

Deering twine is made in the same large plant where Deering binders are made. The manufacturers of Deering binders make twine because they want a twine used with the Deering binder that can be absolutely relied on.

Twine troubles are almost invariably blamed on the binder. In order to escape these troubles Deering twine is as perfect as human skill can make it—as reliable as the best material and skilled workmanship can make it.

Give your binder a chance to do its best work by using reliable Deering twine. We handle it in the following brands and lengths: Sisal, 500 feet; Standard Sisal, 500 feet; Manila, 600 feet; Pure Manila, 650 feet.

Can You Work It

If a 2-6x6-6 screen door will keep out 1,000,000 flies in one year at a cost of 90c, how many flies will a 2-8x6-8 door keep out? and how long can you afford to be without screens; figuring cost of a 2-8 door at $1.00, your health at $1.00 a minute, and wall paper at 20c a roll?

Just excuse me a minute while you're looking for your "specks and pencil"; I will sell this "waiting customer" one of our "fancy" screen doors.

TRAGEDY TURNED TO COMEDY

British Officer Tells How Snuff Saved Him From a Hungry Indian Tigress.

A comedy which came very near to tragedy is related by a gallant officer of the Bengal Lancers, now home on furlough.

Here is the strange true story in the soldier's own words:

"I was out for a day in the jungle, and had had rather poor sport. Lying down for a bit of a rest upon some rank dry grass on the edge of a wood in the afternoon, I was seized from behind without a moment's warning by a huge tigress, which had got my scent and silently tracked me down.

"She seized me by the breast of the coat with her great teeth, and quickly shook me into a state of unconsciousness. Of course, I thought it was all up with me.

"But no. Before long I made a startling recovery. Hardly realizing for a while where I was and what had happened, I heard a little distance away a peculiar noise, as if someone was sneezing violently. It was the terrible tigress.

"I rubbed my still somewhat dazed eyes, and then discerned the great beast slinking away, sneezing all the time, and every now and again emitting a frightful roar.

"Only when she had got clean out of sight did the strange truth dawn upon me. The tigress, in shaking me preparatory to finishing me off, had jerked my recently replenished snuff-box open from my jacket pocket, and received the contents full in her face and eyes. Hence the sudden retreat and my salvation."

SHAKING HANDS WITH FACES

Lackaye Said John Drew's Was Only One With Which That Could Be Done.

Joseph Jefferson and Wilton Lackaye were in the same company one season. It was the custom of Mr. Jefferson to respond to curtain calls and make a speech to the audience. He enjoyed it, and the audience enjoyed it also. Mr. Lackaye, however, always contended that an actor should not step out of his part in this manner.

One night after Mr. Jefferson had made his speech and was going to his dressing-room he met Lackaye.

"Well, Wilton," said Jefferson, "how did I do tonight?"

"Oh," replied Lackaye, "the same old story. You went out before the audience and made the usual blunder."

"Blunder!" exclaimed Jefferson. "What did I do or say that you would call a blunder?"

"Why," said Lackaye, "you said, 'As I look into your faces, I feel that I should like to shake hands with each and every one.'"

"Well, what's wrong with that?" asked Jefferson.

"It's perfectly absurd," retorted Lackaye. "The only face that I ever saw that you could shake hands with is John Drew's."—Lippincott's.

Initial Bluff.

I didn't know you had so many initials," said one man to another who had been lucky enough to secure an interview with the capitalist. "I nearly dropped over when you told the boy that J. K. H. Allen wished to see the boss. What do they all stand for?"

"Nothing," said the man of many initials. "J. for John is the only one I have any right to. The rest are added just for effect. It was on their strength that I got in to see you.

"A string of letters will secure you an interview almost anywhere; not printed on a card—never send in your card if you are unknown and not properly introduced—but spoken and with emphasis—J. K. H.—just like that, so the boy will think you are somebody and will take care to repeat those blessed initials with the same force. Not one man in a million will turn you down if you can get yourself announced that way."

To Entertain Children.

Several young mothers with small children, who do not keep maids, are following a novel plan of entertainment for the children and relief for themselves. Each Wednesday afternoon one of the mothers takes all of the children to entertain for the afternoon, which leaves the other mothers for that afternoon free for social duties, matinee, shopping, or any other pleasure or duty, and as it is only once in four weeks that each mother has all the children, it does not become tiresome. The children call it their party day, and most thoroughly enjoy it. They usually make a kindergarten afternoon of it, though each mother follows her own inclination as to that. Simple refreshments are served, and the plan has proved a great success.

Anesthetized Rejection Slip.

Elizabeth Jordan said that with all the manuscripts the late Margaret E. Sangster had occasion to return, not one ever carried a heartache with it.

She saw everyone who wanted to see her, receiving all callers. She was greatly interested in young writers. And when they had no writing gift, tactfully she would set them going on in some other direction. Perhaps some woman who had brought her poor little efforts to Mrs. Sangster could bake sweetmeats, though she couldn't write. Then would Mrs. Sangster work around among the club women she knew until she got sufficient orders for sweetmeats to give that woman employment.—Christian Herald

DANGER IN DELAY.

Kidney Diseases Are Too Dangerous For Maryville People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they so often get a firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health will be gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, urinary troubles, dropsy, gravel and Bright's disease may follow as the kidneys get worse. Don't neglect your kidneys. Help the kidneys with Doan's Kidney Pills, which are so strongly recommended right here in Maryville.

Mrs. C. Howard, 702 East Third street, Maryville, Mo., says: "One of the family suffered from sharp pains through the small of the back, felt tired all the time, had dizzy spells and couldn't rest well at night. After Doan's Kidney Pills were used the pains went away and there was a great improvement in health."

Mr. Bryan to the Girl Graduates.

"I would rather the head were dull than the heart cold," said Secretary Bryan to the graduating class of a New Rochelle girls' school, whom he exhorted to prefer the "democracy of learning." This is about what Kingsley meant when he said, "Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever."

But are not these reactionary views to express to young women on the threshold of the higher feminine yearning? They smack of Jane Austen ideals and are contrary to modern notions of sex equality in culture. The times demand more intellectuality in women, whether or not with the emotional indifference that often accompanies it.

And after all, can a cold heart do anything like as much harm to society as a dull head? Cold hearts are amenable to reason and may be warmed into responsiveness; at most a cold nature exercises only a limited influence for either good or evil. But who can answer for the consequences of dullness, either passive or under stress of emotional excitement? A dull head is a menace against which society has not adequate remedy. "Against stupidity," said Schiller, "the gods themselves battle in vain."—New York World.

AS TOLD BY A DANCER

When She Danced, Her Brain Was as Busy as Her Nimble Toes.

By JOHN FRANCIS MACKENZIE.

When Lottie danced her brain was as busy as her toes. Her famous snake dance had been the rage in London and New York during the season. In three months Lottie had made more money than she had earned before during the whole eight years of her working life.

Lottie had always known that she could dance. But that money was to be made in dancing had seemed an absurd idea—would have seemed so, if anybody had suggested it to her. In those days of which she was thinking she had danced round her little hall room until the roomers below had complained to the landlady; that was the extent of her dancing.

The young fellow in the second row of the stalls, with the foolish, dissipated face, was watching her again. She knew him, though he did not know her; in fact, she knew him intimately, and she reflected on this with a little smile of amusement which the audience mistook for a stage pleasantry. She had been pestered by him for a week now. First bouquets had come with little notes in them, then letters. Once he had tried to speak to her at the stage door. She had put the flowers in water, tossed the notes and the letters away unread, and brushed past him as quietly as though he were a lump of mud in the street. Still he persisted. He had not always been so persistent, in those days of which Lottie was thinking.

Seven years before she had been a saleswoman in Bryant & Jones' department store. It was a big store and treated its employes fairly well. Still, Lottie had not been happy there. She had been domestic in her tastes—still was, in fact—and she and Joe were both looking forward to the time when they were to be married and live in their little home, when

Was Watching Her Again.

Lottie would not go to work any more. But Lottie was a pleasure-loving girl, and she often wished that Joe could earn a little more than his $15 a week as a tally clerk.

Then Young Mr. Jones—the one with the foolish face, in the second row—had seen her and asked who she was. And he had taken her out to supper. Both were young and simple then, and both knew that they were madly in love with each other. And Young Mr. Jones had asked her to marry him.

Can a girl love two men at the same time? Perhaps Lottie really loved neither. She was very fond of slow, easy-going Joe, but this was different. Joe soon discovered where she spent these evenings. Once he waited for her outside the restaurant and would have made a scene had not Lottie managed to calm him. That night Young Mr. Jones asked Lottie to marry immediately.

"Not unless your mother and father are willing," said Lottie. Poor, simple Lottie! Here she was practically refusing the only son of a millionaire, and just out of foolish principle. But that was the way in which she had been trained. Stay, though, how very unprincipled it was to throw over Joe, just for the comfort that Young Mr. Jones could offer her! She was sure now that she had always been in love with Joe. But eight years ago Lottie had not been certain at all, and Young Mr. Jones, with his foolish face, had possessed an indescribable glamor. He had altered a good deal since then.

Anyway, her action was disastrous for Joe, because he did just the sort of thing his easy-going, slow-moving mind would have been expected to suggest to him. He shot himself in the breast. The doctors saved him, but the bullet had injured the spine. Joe would never go to his tally desk again without two sticks to support him, they said.

But Lottie did not know Joe had been so foolish when she accompanied Young Mr. Jones to his parents' house on the avenue. Young Mr. Jones had told them of his intention and they were waiting for her. Lottie anticipated a scene. But there was no scene. Old Mr. Jones shook her hand warmly and said:

"My dear, you are far too capable a young woman to throw yourself away on a foolish boy like Alfred. Look at him. Do you see the limited cranial index? Meaning to say, don't you perceive that you have hooked a bad one?"

Old Mrs. Jones said: "The store is in my name, and if Alfred marries you he will get nothing. And Alfred could never earn an honest dollar in his life."

"I'll leave it to Alfred," said Lottie, and Alfred burst into tears and knelt at mamma's knee; and old Mrs. Jones petted him and caressed him, and Alfred did not look up at Lottie. When she had left the room old Mr. Jones stopped her in the hall.

"Will a couple of thousand dollars settle it, my dear?" he asked.

Lottie shook her head and walked out of the house, and for weeks old Mr. Jones lived in daily fear of receiving a lawyer's letter. But it never came, and he never saw Lottie again.

Lottie had stopped dancing now and was bowing to an applauding house. The foolish young man in the second row was clapping his gloved hands fatuously. Lottie looked at him derisively. It was for that poor wretch that Joe had shot himself; it was for him that the course of her life had been altered; that she had been driven into dancing in cheap cabarets and at amateur nights, enduring scoffs and insults, to earn a miserable living when the department stores learned about Young Mr. Jones and refused to engage her. Lottie swept off the stage and put on her clothes.

At the stage door she saw Young Mr. Jones, with a bouquet in his hand. Young Mr. Jones planted himself squarely across her path, and Lottie gave him a box on the ears that sent him tumbling to the ground. When he had picked himself up she said:

"You had your chance years ago and lost it. I'm Lottie!"

Young Mr. Jones looked as though he was going to cry again. But Lottie had already forgotten him. She was eager to hurry home; there might be news for her.

She got into the taxicab that always waited for her and was driven rapidly to the modest little flat that she rented in Harlem. Nobody in the apartment house, save one, knew that Lottie was the famous dancer who had set the town crazy. She got out of the elevator and entered a bedroom in which a little boy lay sleeping. She bent over him; and if the audience could have seen the look on her face then they would have wondered what on earth this woman had in common with Lottie.

Then she went into the living room and bent over a man who sat reading in an arm chair, and kissed him. She had come in so softly that he had not heard her.

"I've got good news, Lottie," he said. "The doctor thinks I'm getting better. He says I'll be as strong and well as ever in six months more."

"You dear old Joe," said Lottie, brushing away her tears and kissing him again.

THIS BURGLAR WAS WELCOME

Victim Would Give Anything for Another Visit From the Night Marauder.

"I know a burglar—that is, I met him once—who can have anything I've got if he will only visit me again," said the hollow-eyed man.

"I was in bad shape. For months my arch-enemy, insomnia, had held me in a death grip. I was in the midst of one of my very worst nights when the burglar came.

"I had been lying for I don't know how long trying to imagine I was asleep, which was the nearest approach to sleep I ever got these nights, and had just about succeeded, when my burglar scraped his foot against the wall.

"I opened my eyes and saw him sitting on the window sill. I knew he was a burglar, but I wasn't scared.

"'You can run away with the house itself,' I said, 'if you'll only let me sink into a doze again.'

"He understod right off how it was.

"'Tough, ain't it?' he said. 'I've been there. In fact, I'm just getting over a nasty attack and have half a dozen sleeping powders in my pocket now. A doctor I tried to hold up one night gave them to me. They're the best I ever tried. If you like, I'll let you have one.'

"I did want one, so the burglar turned on the light and mixed the powder with a little water. I gulped it down.

"'Thanks,' said I. Then, as I fell back on the pillow, I said: 'Go ahead and help yourself.'

"He did, but he was very considerate. He only took my watch and a roll of bills from my trousers pockets. In payment he left the other five sleeping powders.

"They were worth the price. They put me into such fine condition that I have slept like a top up to about two months ago.

"Now insomnia has me again and I have no more powders nor the address of the burglar's doctor. I wish he'd rob my house again."

Goes the Limit.

"Miss Bleeker affects literary airs."

"Indeed! Does she nibble the stub of her pen while in the throes of composition?"

"Worse than that. She not only nibbles the stub of her pen, but she nibbles chocolate creams as well."

No Frills on It.

"Was the testimony in that case cumulative?"

"No, sir; it was just the plain stuff."

Reducing Cost of Harvest.

Grain is hereafter not to be reaped, but will be threshed in the field as it stands, saving the farmers something like $200,000,000 a year. This is the claim of Frank Morse, who describes in the Technical World Magazine the recent invention of a Kansan, Curtis C. Baldwin. The machine has been used for three successive harvests, but proved its utility and practicability most conclusively last fall when it threshed from 25 to 30 acres of standing grain in a ten-hour day. The inventor contends that it will reduce the cost of the harvest from 14 cents to 2 cents a bushel—San Francisco Argonaut.
